

Saving the Rhino in the Waterberg

The Ant Collection are members of the Waterberg Nature Conservancy that is made up of numerous private game reserves covering an area of 300,000ha. As members they seek to conserve and promote the natural wilderness of the Waterberg, its landscape, rivers and heritage sites.

The Waterberg is a UNESCO Biosphere Reserve, which gives it special status as a unique landscape and ecosystem. The Waterberg Biosphere Reserve works to ensure a mutual balance between conservation, education and sustainable human development.

The Waterberg is home to one of the three largest rhino populations remaining on the planet. Killing for its horn is still a serious threat to the rhino's survival. The illegal wildlife trade is a cruel and relentless burden on the local community that has to cope with the terrible consequences of poaching.

Waterberg Rhino UK (charity no 1187429) was set up in January 2020, bringing together a wealth of support that spans communities in the Waterberg, the UK and across the world.

Based in the UK, the 5 trustees all have strong links with the region

The charity fundraises to help in the conservation and protection of rhino, whilst working in collaboration with carefully chosen organizations and individuals in the Waterberg, to ensure the best outcomes for both the community and environment, and to improve education and sustain livelihoods.
